GERMAN DEFENSES BUCKLE UNDER HEAVY PRESSURE

American Power Drive
Southeast of Metz Begins
To Weaken Opposition

PATTON ADVANCES

Three Infantry Divisions
Shove the Nazis Eastward
On A 27-Mile Sector

By International News Service
German defenses buckled today under the pressure of an American power drive southeast of Metz on the Western Front.

Three infantry divisions of Lieutenant George S. Patton's Third Army shoved the Nazis eastward on a 27-mile sector. They crossed the rain-swollen Seille River at three places, and evicted the enemy from 14 towns.

These divisions included the 80th, 6th and 35th. They are part of the 2th corps, under immediate command of Maj. Gen. Manton S. Eddy.

Hindered by mud and enemy minefields they slogged forward, under cover of a pulsating artillery barrage and with close support of Ninth Air Force fighter-bombers.

Thunderbolt and Lightning aircraft bombed Nazi airfields, railway yards and bridges in the vicinity, they carried out at least 800 sorties, some of which were low level attacks against enemy command posts and defense positions.

The 12th Corps encountered varying resistance. It was stubborn at some points. In other sectors, the enemy fought only moderately.

PATTON THROWS IN THREE MORE DIVISIONS

Supreme Headquarters, A. E. F., France—Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton extended the Third Army offensive in France today, throwing in elements of three more divisions to back up the three which already have driven the Nazis from 14 towns southeast of Metz.

The new blows were loosed north of Metz, expanding the Third Army drive into a triple-pronged threat to the Nazi defenses protecting the Saar. Two crossings of the Moselle River and other gains were made despite mud-covered terrain and continued bad weather.

Below Metz the Third Army moved ahead on vital sectors across a 27-mile front, blasting its way forward behind heavy artillery shelling and bombings by American fighter-bombers.

In the Hurtgen Forest area of Germany below Aachen, Lieut. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges' First Army maintained attacks in the face of heavy opposition put up by the Nazis in an effort to prevent an American breakthrough to the plains of Cologne.

ALLIES CROSS MOSELLE AT TWO POINTS

With the U. S. Third Army in France—Defying the rain-swollen Moselle River, mud and bad weather, Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton threw elements of three more divisions into the offensive in Eastern France today and sent his troops across the Moselle at two points north of Metz.

The 3 divisions sent in to widen the action belong to the 20th Army Corps which made the famous dash across France through Le Mans, Rheims and Verdun.

The Fifth Division in the early morning took Cheminot, on the Seille River 10 miles south of Metz. The 90th swung expertly into action, quickly crossing the Moselle at two points while the other division got a rough start through an artillery barrage which pounded them from 7 p. m. last night to midnight.

Provision for the adequate care of returning servicemen was taken into consideration at a well attended meeting of Albert R. Atkinson, Jr., Post, No. 210, A. L. A. A. headquarters, in Doylestown this week.

The subject was introduced by Capt. George C. Butler, who said he feels veterans of World War I should take an interest in the welfare of the men now being discharged from the service and those who will return to civilian life later.

Reporting briefly on the meeting of the Doylestown Community Service Council, Capt. Butler spoke of the formation of a veterans' advisory committee, the duty of which, he said, should be to come to the assistance of the veterans and to make it unnecessary for him to go through a large amount of red tape in order to find employment.

Dr. John J. Bridgeman, a visitor at the meeting and re-employment committee man of Local Selective Service Board No. 3 also spoke along the same line.

HISTORY OF EDIFICE

Major Andrew G. Solla, army chaplain now overseas, writes of a most interesting visit paid to Bristol, England.

The Bristolian has the following to say about the city of Bristol for which this Bristol is named:

Sometime ago, I traveled about 140 miles to visit the ancient city of Bristol. The only reason that took me there, was to see just what sort of place our own Bristol had been named after, and to my great pleasure, I found it to be a city worthy of all its namesakes in many states of the Union.

This Bristol was a great city back in the middle ages. It was from this city that John Cabot, an Italian navigator, in the service of the British Sovereign, with his son Sebastian, sailed to make new discoveries of the new world, and came for England.

Unfortunately, Bristol was also

MODERN SAMARITANS

Not much is heard in this war about the ambulance drivers and their heroism. Dorothy Sutherland, Army Nurse Corps journalist, thinks these men deserve more recognition, and she makes a strong case for her contention.

When new decorations are being handed around, someone ought to think up a special one for every member of every ambulance outfit, she says. Any Army nurse, she adds, will testify to their self-sacrifice, their patience and their gentleness in caring for and transporting the wounded. They show no fear for personal safety, she asserts, and will go anywhere and take endless risks for the sake of a wounded American boy.

In a dispatch from southern France, she tells of drivers working all night bringing wounded men from the front, taking a few hours' rest and then reloading their ambulances with post-operative casualties for the trip to an airport. The road wound around the French Alpine foothills, a highway narrow and difficult to maneuver. "Tired as they were," she said, "these boys drove carefully but lost no time, skillfully avoiding ruts and holes, easing their patients along as gently as a mother wheels a baby carriage. En route, the drivers talked with the patients and got food for them. They deserve an award all their own—men like my driver, who didn't want me to mention his name because, as he put it, 'I'm only doing my job like every other Joe in this Army.'"

Of course, there are men in the services who take many more and greater risks than do ambulance drivers, but there is something about the solicitude of these men for the wounded that has a special appeal. They are the Samaritans of modern warfare.

A HERO'S MOTHER

When she died in Washington last week, Mrs. Annie Sinnott Devereux was without final word of the fate of her hero son, Lieut. Col. James J. P. Devereux, the gallant Marine commander of Wake Island when it was captured by the Japanese almost three years ago.

Mrs. Devereux was of a military family. Her ancestors fought in the Civil War and today four of her sons and a grandson are in the armed forces of the United States and Canada. Her husband served in the Spanish-American war and she was a resident of Cuba when her sons, John and James, were born.

She wrote her famous prisoner son every week, although for a long time she had no knowledge that her letters reached him. She heard from him twice. A postcard and letter dated September, 1943, and received in February, 1944, informed her that he had not heard from home since June, 1942. Last August word came in a letter to his father-in-law that some of his mother's letters finally had reached him.

ARMERS URGED TO PROTECT FOREST TRACTS

Should Use Same Precautions As On Smaller Woodlots

OTHER FARM NEWS

By Suzanne Flick
(I. N. S. Farm Editor)

HARRISBURG, Nov. 9 — Pennsylvania farmers were urged today by the Department of Forests and Waters to take the same precautions in protecting their forest tracts from fire as they do smaller woodlots adjacent to farms.

George H. Wirt, chief of the protection division, declared approximately 67,000 acres of timber land per cent owned by farmers were destroyed by fire last year at an estimated loss of $250,000. He added that few small woodlots were burned.

Wirt credited the farmers with taking sufficient care of their property and stressed the importance of guarding against the carelessness of other persons.

Many owners do not realize the value of their forest lands," Wirt declared. "There are all kinds of possibilities in them and the surface is just beginning to be scratched. These areas are certainly worth the effort of protecting them against autumn fire hazards."

The State Agriculture Department reported the estimates of 1944 butter production and value with first place swinging between York and Lancaster counties.

Traditional in first or second place, the two counties will probably produce in the territory of 450,000 pounds of farm butter valued at approximately $220,000. York led last year by 1630 pounds and $800.

Three other high ranking counties are Butler, Somerset and Indiana which are expected to yield between 150,000 and 175,000 pounds valued between $90,000 and $375,000.

The State total was estimated at more than eight million pounds.

valued at close to $5,000,000.

The 1944 crop of seedleaf tobacco topped last year in both quality and quantity, according to the State Agriculture Department.

September rains boosted the yield to 1,475 pounds an acre compared with a 1,260 an acre in 1943. This year's crop was estimated at 450,000 pounds.

A 20,000-ton production of grapes has been anticipated placing them in fifth place.

The crop will be 4700 tons larger than the 1943 yield and will surpass average crops for the 10-year period—ending 1942—by more than 2000 pounds. While sugar content was assumed to be high, the size of Late planted carrots were making good growth, but the crop as a whole will be light due to ground rot. Celery made a comeback after suffering from blight and stunted

ENCHANTED BOOK. It is just that, an "en-chanted" book. Never have I seen a more fascinating one for children. It is Gustaf Tengren's "Story Book" for he has both written and illustrated it. The many illustrations are so incredibly striking that I would like two books, one to take apart for framing and one to read over and over to my children. All the stories are old ones made new by retelling—like "Dr. Doolittle," "Treasure Island," "Rip Van Winkle," etc. The Tengren book measures 10x12 inches, with eighty-nine glorious pages. Only $1.95. Do order it and make some child from four to twelve happy! You'll find it in the Snellenburg Book Dept. (1st fl.)

AT LAST, really graceful fur hats! That special little Millinery Saloon of the main Second Floor Millinery Dept. of the Snellenburg Store not only has an amazing variety of original fur-chapeaux, but is also designing them to order, either from our own fur or newly purchased ones. I noticed particularly the flexibility and graceful draping or modeling of the pelts. Fur hats are "different" this season and the Snellenburg Saloon's are just a little more so. (2nd fl.)

CIRCUS, CIRCUS! Yes and free. One thing that I personally love about this circus is that all the animals performing in it are pets, trained with affection, and acting because they like to act. And how they do act! There's a fat pony twenty-five years old, who could teach many of us manners; dressed-up monkeys, amazing dogs, cockatoos whose performance is out of this world. The children love the clowns. The very little children have an up-front "seeing" section, although all seats are good because the circus ring is raised. Where is all this? In the Snellenburg Auditorium. Every day at 11:30 a. m. and 4 p. m., also Wednesday evening at 7:30 p. m. Something welcome! Let's go! (3rd fl.)

HOLIDAY SHIRTS. Now you can get them — "Sloopy Joe" Cardinals that the schoolgirls love, as Christmas gifts. But hurry to take your choice of maize, powder blue, red, pink, purple. All 100% wool. He'll approve them. At the price of only $1.95 each, you might buy him several. Sizes 14 to 17; 32 to 35 in sleeve lengths. To be had in the Snellenburg Men's Furnishings Dept. (1st fl.)

P.S. Shop at this friendly store—Marked from 11th to 12th, thru to 1125-29 Chestnut St., Phila. Or order by mail. Or 'phone free (56, 14 and 15 out-of-town calls only.) Clippings appreciated. Penna. number, ENTERPRISE 10160; New Jersey, W.V. 1150. Cheerfully, FAITH.

THE QUEEN of flattery is the pearl. One pearls were for the rich only, but now Nature's high work of art is so subtly duplicated that some synthetic pearls are just as beautiful as hers. This is true of "Richelieu" pearls. The Snellenburg Costume Jewelry Dept. is fortunate in having some "Empress" graduated Richelieu at only $6.95 and $7.95 a strand, together with rhinestone clasps. These pearls will make exquisite gifts. They have a fine creamy lustre. In case you wish to order them, the $7.95 strands are 16, 17 or 18 inches long, with knot between. The $6.95 strands are strung regularly and measure 16 or 18 inches. For gifting they will be nicely boxed. All are graduated (1st fl.)

ADDED WARMTH is often needed for a winter coat or a fall coat used for winter. This is possible with the separate snug linings that can be bought in the Snellenburg Coat Dept., in sizes 12 to 20. Pretty linings of padded rayon silk, sleeved with knitted windproof cuffs, come in green, tan, brown, copper red, black. These are priced at $5.95. At $7.95 there is a sleeveless fleece jersey lining, its upper faced with rayon silk. It is sleeveless, in brown or lighter tan, and also comes in sizes 12 to 20. (2nd fl.)

XMAS CARDS. Assortment of 21 different cards, some general, others particularly suited to children, or for religious greetings, at 6¢ a box. Three boxes of these should see you through. Some folks like this varied assortment as an "extra" to their selected cards, so that there will be on hand some for folks they might have forgotten until the last busy holiday moment. Conveniently boxed. Snellenburg Stationery Dept. (1st fl.)

a port where much traffic in slavery was carried on, at first when such trade was legal. Naturally it was done openly, but when it became illegal, "bootlegging" in slaves, if one may use that expression, became rather profitable. Those who have read "Captain Caution," by Kenneth Robert, will remember that such was the case.

Bristol also has one of the leading universities in England. Its beautiful new tower, similar to the one of the graduate school at Princeton, N. J., stands at the top of the hill which can be seen from afar. The fine museum, unfortunately, has been damaged. Then there are also other private schools of note.

But like any English community, the most striking feature in Bristol is its churches. I certainly do hope that some of them will once again rise to their former glory.

The two most imposing are the Cathedral and the Church of Saint Mary. The Cathedral is not so pretentious as York, Lincoln, Gloucester, or many others, yet it is a magnificent edifice.

Up to 1942, it was a monastery church. But in that year it was made a cathedral. At this time it was found that the nave was in a ruinous state, so the next year it was pulled down. In 1836 the See was joined to Gloucester, and became known as Gloucester-Bristol See.

In 1868, the task of rebuilding the lost nave and the western towers was undertaken and it was completed in 1888. In 1897, the See of Bristol was constituted afresh.

In the eyes of many, Saint Mary's Church surpasses the Cathedral. Its spires seem to pierce the very heavens. As soon as I left the train I made my way to old Saint Mary's, thinking that I was in the Cathedral. However, there was something lacking, hence I asked one of the caretakers if it was the Cathedral I was in. He said "No, this is Saint Mary's Church," and with sense of pride, "The Cathedral," said he, "is across the college greens."

May I say, that after having seen this Bristol, I have learned to love more our many Bristols in the states, and especially the one in dear old Pennsylvania.

Blazing artillery barrages that preceded the sustained Patton push were described in front dispatches as the heaviest seen in France since the first World War. General Patton stood in ankle-deep mud to observe operations at the front.

In the Vosges mountain area of France, Nazi troops sustained heavy losses at the hands of the French First Army. The American Seventh Army, in the same sector, eked out small gains, and the American First Army, fighting inside the Reich, battled two miles south of Schmidt in the Aachen area. Enemy resistance was stubborn at Schmidt, and northwest of the town the Yanks lost 500 yards through a heavy Nazi counter-attack.

Northward on the Western Front, British forces fought inside the town of Moerdorf in southern Holland. They battled to snuff out the last pocket of German resistance south of the Maas River.

Nazis also were blasted from the skies today. Tremendous Allied bomber formations headed across the English Channel toward the continent early this morning. Coastal observers report an hour-long procession of thunderous flights.

On the eastern front, the enemy made a vain effort to improve his position at Budapest, trying to deprive Russian forces of strategic positions near the Hungarian capital. The Red Army repulsed a series of German counter-attacks and remained poised to drive for the liberation of the city.

GERMAN DEFENSES BUCKLE UNDER HEAVY PRESSURE

American Power Drive Southeast of Metz Begins To Weaken Opposition

PATTON ADVANCES

Three Infantry Divisions Shove the Nazis Eastward On A 27-Mile Sector

By International News Service

German defenses buckled today under the pressure of an American power drive southeast of Metz on the Western Front.

Three infantry divisions of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton's Third Army shoved the Nazis eastward on a 27-mile sector. They crossed the rain-worn Seille River at three places, and evicted the enemy from 14 towns.

These divisions included the 80th, 6th and 35th. They are part of the 2d corps, under immediate command of Maj. Gen. Manton S. Eddy. Hindered by mud and enemy minefields they slogged forward, under cover of a pulsating artillery barrage and with close support of Ninth Air Force fighter-bombers.

Thunderbolt and Lightning aircraft bombed Nazi airfields, railway yards and bridges in the vicinity.

They carried out at least 800 sorties, some of which were low level attacks against enemy command posts and defense positions.

The 12th Corps encountered varying resistance. It was stubborn at some points. In other sectors, the enemy fought only moderately.

PATTON THROWS IN THREE MORE DIVISIONS

Supreme Headquarters, A. E. F., France—Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton extended the Third Army offensive in France today, throwing in elements of three more divisions to back up the three which already have driven the Nazis from 14 towns southeast of Metz.

The new blows were loosed north of Metz, expanding the Third Army drive into a triple-pronged threat to the Nazi defenses protecting the Saar. Two crossings of the Moselle River and other gains were made despite mud-covered terrain and continued bad weather.

Below Metz the Third Army moved ahead on vital sectors across a 27-mile front, blasting its way forward behind heavy artillery shelling and bombings by American fighter-bombers.

In the Hurtgen Forest area of Germany below Aachen, Lieut. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges' First Army maintained attacks in the face of heavy opposition put up by the Nazis in an effort to prevent an American breakthrough to the plains of Cologne.

ALLIES CROSS MOSELLE AT TWO POINTS

With the U. S. Third Army in France—Defying the rain-swollen Moselle River, mud and bad weather, Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton threw elements of three more divisions into the offensive in Eastern France today and sent his troops across the Moselle at two points north of Metz.

The 3d divisions sent in to widen the action belong to the 20th Army Corps which made the famous dash across France through Le Mans, Rheims and Verdun.

The Fifth Division in the early morning took Cheminot on the Seille River 10 miles south of Metz. The 9th swung expertly into action, quickly crossing the Moselle at two points while the other division got a rough start through an artillery barrage which pounded them from 7 p. m. last night to midnight.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

Suckers

(This column was written on Election Day, Tuesday, Nov. 7.)

Washington, Nov. 7.—THIS is written before the votes are counted. There can be, therefore, no effort to assess either credit or blame for the conduct of the campaign. Both sides, of course, made mistakes. But those of the victors have now been washed out by success, while those of the losers are magnified by defeat.

THE FACTS are clear enough. Until last month, for nearly three years, the newspapers have had it pointed out to them it was their patriotic duty not to mention—or even hint at—the absence of the President from the White House, until such time and in such a way as the office of the censor should indicate as proper and safe. Every newspaper complied. If there was in those years a single violation it cannot now be recalled. The reasons for this secrecy were obvious and proper. It was a military precaution to insure the safety of the Commander in Chief in a time of war. For that purpose there was wholehearted co-operation from the press.

HOWEVER, it is permissible, before the winner is definitely known, to point out that the newspapers and newsmen of the country again have been made to look (and should feel) foolish by a gentleman who takes a strange juvenile (to be polite) delight in making them look that way. And this condition is not inked either with their attitude in the recent campaign or with its result. It is very simply due to another of Mr. Roosevelt's tricky inconsistencies which not only make

Major Andrew G. Solla Tells Of The Cathedral and St. Mary's Church

HISTORY OF EDIFICE

Major Andrew G. Solla, army chaplain now overseas, writes of a most interesting visit paid to Bristol, England.

The Bristolian has the following to say about the city of Bristol for which this Bristol is named:

Some time ago, I traveled about 140 miles to visit the ancient city of Bristol. The only reason that took me there, was to see just what sort of place our own Bristol had been named after, and to my great pleasure, I found it to be a city worthy of all its namesakes in many states of the Union.

This Bristol was a great city back in the middle ages. It was from this city that John Cabot, an Italian navigator, in the service of the British Sovereign, with his son Sebastian, sailed to make new discoveries of the new world, and claim for England.

Unfortunately, Bristol was also
